XM has "gone out of this world" to provide the highest quality and widest range of services available as governed by this type of media. A few years they took a risk and invested hundreds of millions of dollars to launch a new and unique service, where as main stream media broadcasters sat back and watched. By allowing legislation to restrict XMs capabilities based on the lobbying powers of large main stream media companies, congress and other influential powers will be sending a clear and direct message that they can be bought. I can see why broadcasters would want to put limits on such a great service, but in the spirit of healthy competition it is only fair that XM be allowed to continuing with its great service as it has been for the last 2+ years. Without innovations such as the weather and traffic channels or even XM as a whole the United States would not be a world power. I feel strongly that it would be a "backwards" step in the eyes of innovation and technology to allow the limits proposed (or any variation) for XM to be passed into law
